One dead and two seriously injured in Menton port explosion

‘BRIT’ BOAT BLOWS UP

AN EXPLOSION on board a British registered yacht on Sunday left the boat’s owner dead and two others seriously injured, writes Jenny Paul.

The 26 metre Donna Pup was moored in Menton-Garavan harbour when the fatal explosion ripped through its stern at just past nine o’clock in the morning. The rear of the vessel was extensively damaged. Italian Franco Barone, 42, was killed instantly and his companion Alexandra Carrara and the boat’s captain, Mario Nattucci were injured. Six other guests, four adults and two children – all from Turin – were unhurt.

Investigators are examining the wreckage to determine the cause of the explosion, but early indications are that twelve lead-acid batteries stored in an enclosed compartment were to blame. The car batteries were used as a back up for Donna Pup’s electricity supply. It is thought that hydrogen gas built up in the compartment, which may have then ignited when the captain started the electrics which operate the yacht’s passerelle.

“We were told that they closed the door to the room where the batteries were on Saturday evening, because there was a smell, then they forgot to re-open the door,” Garavan port based nautical specialist Daniel Chamy told The Riviera Gazette. “The gasses would have built up overnight, which is what we believe caused this fatal explosion.”

“What is clear is there was a very serious oversight that night. An enquiry is underway and the investigators are going to talk to everyone who even touched the yacht to ascertain what happened and whether charges need to be pressed,” he explained.

On Tuesday, a luxury yacht caught fire in Beaulieu-sur-Mer, causing havoc in the small port. The cause of the blaze on the 30 metre Saharet is as yet unknown. The yacht is also registered in the UK although the four crew were all Italian.

Football violence comes to Cagnes

OVER fifty soccer hooligans rampaged sleepy Cagnes-sur-Mer last Sunday after a needle match between the town and bitter rival Toulon.

In shocking scenes of violence, which erupted in the car park of the tiny Stade Pierre-Savago, one supporter was restrained when seen carrying a baseball bat while an intervening policeman suffered a leg injury. The youths threw stones and bottles at each other and smashed up nearby parked cars, including a police vehicle.

“The police have opened an enquiry to see how this happened and if they can do anything in future to put into place preventative measures,” Eric Vandervoort of Cagnes’ town hall told The Riviera Gazette. “Unfortunately there has been a rivalry between the two clubs for some time,” he explained.

THE SON of an eminent UK publisher and another British man have been arrested in Paris after police swooped on a suspected high-class call girl operation, write Jenny Paul.

RAMSAY Attallah, 38, and Matthew Barrett, 33, are being held under suspicion of supplying of vice workers to Arab princes, business moguls and Hollywood stars. In Barrett’s hotel suite police uncovered €350,000 in cash and a map of heart-throb actor Leonardo DiCaprio with his arms round two legs south American call girls. The police had been taken outside DiCaprio’s €2,000 a night hotel suite, when he was in Paris earlier this year promoting Gangs of New York.

The American actor and star of Titanic and Romeo and Juliet is thought to have taken the Brazilian beauties back to his suite at the Plaza Athenee after a premiere on January 30. While DiCaprio’s camp did not dispute he was with the ladies, they denied that he paid for their services and say he had no idea they were call girls.

Publishing magnate Naim Attallah, who owns UK based Quartet Books and is the chairman of The Oldie magazine, hit out at the allegations made against son Ramsay. “It is staggering what has happened to my son. He is completely innocent yet he has been locked up in almost medieval conditions, kept in his cell for almost 23 hours a day,” he said.

The wealthy British publisher, writer and philanthropist, who turns 72 today, found notoriety himself twelve years ago when he revealed that his newly appointed French prime minister Edith Cresson had told him in 1997 that she thought over a quarter of British and US men were homosexual. Cresson was outraged, saying “if this conversation took place I was not only not prime minister, I was not even in the government,” and claiming that bringing the matter up was “not very ‘fair play,’ to use an English expression.”

Barrett is accused of conducting an “exotic troupe” of vice workers, including male escorts, transvestites and hookers – one a former Miss South America – who it is alleged charged up to €1,000 an hour for their services. Ten other people have been detained in connection with the case.

German Katja Beste talks to Jenny Paul about motherhood, wine and belly dancing...

“I came to the Riviera three years ago after my husband got a job here selling luxury boats. I’m German by birth and was working in a bar near Stuttgart when I met Russell, who’s English. He was dating one of the other barmaids, but one night we got chatting and we exchanged phone numbers. The next morning his girlfriend found the slip of paper in his pants, but he eventually talked his way out of it! A year later they had split up and we hooked up again. We had met at a rave party. I was 17 and he was 18. He was dating a lady of leisure. We bought an apartment near the beach in Antibes last year. I didn’t find buying it too stressful – buying the furniture was far worse. And, of course, we had a nightmare with a cowboy carpenter. It took him five visits to get one wardrobe built.

In my spare time I love to belly dance. Believe it or not, it is a skill I learned by going to a belly dance class in Stuttgart when I met Russell, who’s English. He was dating a lady of leisure. We bought an apartment near the beach in Antibes last year. I didn’t find buying it too stressful – buying the furniture was far worse. And, of course, we had a nightmare with a cowboy carpenter. It took him five visits to get one wardrobe built.

I was quite disappointed when we went there for the first time. At first I didn’t really like it. Now, though, I love it. I can’t wait to get back here. It’s not all plain sailing, though. We’ve had lots of problems with petty theft. I’ve had a pushchair stolen – luckily with all our possessions. We’ve had a lot of stress. It’s good fun and, despite popular opinion, you don’t have to be a fat cow to belly dance at the reception.
